WESTERN DIVISION

L.A. PRINTEX INDUSTRIES, INC., a
California Corporation,

Plaintiff,

vs.

LE CHÂTEAU, INC., a Canadian Corporation; and DOES 1-10,

Defendants.

CASE NO. CV10 4264-ODW (FMOx)

LE CHÂTEAU'S REPLY
MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT;

SUPPLEMENTAL DECLARATION OF DAVID W. QUINTO

Date: May 23, 2011
Time: 1:30 p.m.
Courtroom: 11
Judge: Hon. Otis D. Wright, II

Preliminary Statement

2 Plaintiff nowhere disputes that the Court in fact lacks subject matter jurisdiction to hear 3 this case. Instead, it asks that the Court rely only on a presumption that subject matter jurisdiction 4 exists. In theory, the presumption is rebuttable. However, all evidence necessary to rebut the 5 presumption was or is in plaintiff's sole possession and plaintiff has spoliated it or otherwise 6 refused to provide it. Accordingly, plaintiff is asking the Court to rely on plaintiff's own bad faith 7 in presuming that there is subject matter jurisdiction.

8 In doing so, plaintiff has misrepresented the holding of a Ninth Circuit case that its own 9 counsel briefed, argued and won. United Fabrics International, Inc. v. C&J Wear, Inc., 630 F.3d 10 1255 (9th Cir. 2011), concerned the copyright registration of a "collection of fabric designs as an 11 unpublished collection of works." Id. at 1259. Here, in contrast, the collection at issue was 12 registered as a published work and, as the Ninth Circuit explained, a "necessary element of a 13 published-collection copyright is that the collection is sold, distributed or offered for sale 14 concurrently." Id.

15 Plaintiff, alone, could provide evidence concerning whether the collection at issue was 16 concurrently "sold, distributed or offered for sale," but, in responding to Le Château's discovery 17 requests, it failed and refused to provide any such evidence. Had there been any such evidence, 18 plaintiff could have easily pointed to it in opposing this motion. Plaintiff provided a declaration 19 from its principle, Jae Nah, but even he declined to aver that the works were published as a 20 collection.

21 The issues, then, are whether the Court may rely on a presumption that there is subject 22 matter jurisdiction when not even plaintiff claims that subject matter jurisdiction in fact exists, and 23 whether plaintiff is entitled to rely on that presumption when it failed to keep, destroyed, or 24 refused to produce all evidence necessary to rebut the presumption.

Argument

I. THERE IS NO BASIS TO BELIEVE THAT SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION IN FACT EXISTS.

5 As explained in Le Château's moving papers, the Ninth Circuit made clear in United 6 Fabrics that there is a clear distinction between the registration of a "published" collection of 7 works and the registration of an "unpublished" collection of works. Citing the Copyright Act, 17 8 U.S.C. § 101, the Ninth Circuit held that a "necessary element" of a published-collection copyright 9 is that "the collection is sold, distributed or offered for sale concurrently" and, citing 37 C.F.R.
10 § 202.3(b)(4)(B), it noted that for an unpublished collection, "there is no such requirement." 11 630 F.3d at 1259. In holding that such requirement exists for published collection copyrights, the 12 Ninth Circuit was entirely consistent with the earlier holding in Kay Berry, Inc. v. Taylor Gifts, 13 Inc., 421 F.3d 199, 205 (3d Cir. 2005).

14 In discussing United Fabrics, plaintiff has ignored that it concerned an unpublished
15 collection. Further, plaintiff has misstated the United Fabrics holding in arguing that Judge 16 Pregerson's explanation of the legal requirements of a collective-work registration should be 17 disregarded because his decision was reversed. In fact, the Ninth Circuit did not criticize in any 18 way Judge Pregerson's analysis of the legal requirements of a collective-registration of public 19 works. Indeed, its holding that the concurrent sale, distribution or offering for sale of the items 20 included in a published-collection copyright is a "necessary element" is a strong affirmation of 21 Judge Pregerson's analysis. The Ninth Circuit held only that Judge Pregerson had erred by 22 extending that analysis to cover unpublished collections. Because plaintiff herein registered its 23 works as a published collection, it is obligated to show that they were published as a collection.

24 In deference to that unavoidable conclusion, plaintiff argues that it should not be punished 25 for "a misstatement or clerical error in the registration application." Opposition Memorandum 26 ("Opp. Mem.") at 12:18-19. Of course, there is no evidence of any "misstatement or clerical 27 error." Ignoring that omission, plaintiff then makes a straw argument that a simple "misstatement 28 or clerical error in the registration application" provides an insufficient basis "to establish a fraud

1 on the Copyright Office." Opp. Mem. at 12:21-22. Le Château has, of course, never argued that 2 there was a fraud on the Copyright Office. It has argued only that the registered works were never 3 published as a collection. Significantly, the Declaration of Jae Nah submitted in opposition to the 4 motion nowhere avers that there was any "misstatement or clerical error in the registration 5 application," nor does it aver that the works were unpublished when registered. Nor could 6 Mr. Nah so declare: the registration application recited the date of publication, which preceded 7 the date of registration. Because the date of publication is provided in the registration application, 8 plaintiff cannot claim that it inadvertently "checked" the wrong box (and, as noted, offered no 9 evidence that it did so). More importantly, because plaintiff's sole basis for invoking the 10 jurisdiction of the federal courts is provided by the copyright registration certificate - which 11 plaintiff has never attempted to amend or correct - plaintiff cannot now disavow it.¹ Plaintiff also 12 bizarrely cites the PRO-IP Act, 17 U.S.C. § 411, for no apparent reason. The PRO-IP Act 13 provides that, under certain conditions, a certificate of registration containing "inaccurate" 14 information will not destroy a copyright infringement claim. Here, of course, plaintiff has not 15 adduced any evidence that the copyright registration certificate at issue contained "inaccurate" 16 information. Plaintiff's declarant, Jae Nah, could easily have said so, but he declined to do so.²

17 Accordingly, a necessary element of plaintiff's claim is that it prove that the works 18 registered as a published collection were in fact published as a collection.

21 ¹ Plaintiff's decision to register its claimed works as "published" or "unpublished" is not 22 trivial. Le Château's counsel in this action has been involved in other cases brought by plaintiff 23 L.A. Printex Industries, Inc., in which third parties had published those works or were already in 24 the process of preparing such works for publication when plaintiff registered them as 25 "unpublished" works. In such instances, the defendants were handed an obvious "independent 26 creation" defense and a strong suspicion was created that plaintiff had merely registered designs 27 created by others (typically in Korea) as its own "original" works. To preclude the possibility of 28 an "independent creation" defense, plaintiff now typically registers its works as "published," as of a date in advance of its application for copyright registration. Supplemental Declaration of David W. Quinto dated May 5, 2011, ¶ 2.

² One can speculate that because Le Château's counsel previously caused Mr. Nah to be found in contempt of court for making a false statement in a declaration, Mr. Nah is now shying away from making claims that could be proved false.

1 II. LE CHÂTEAU IS ENTITLED TO A PRESUMPTION THAT THE EVIDENCE
 2 PLAINTIFF HAS WITHHELD OR SPOLIATED WOULD BE UNFAVORABLE
 3 TO IT.

4 Plaintiff has noted correctly that its copyright registration certificate entitles it to a 5 presumption that the facts stated therein, including that the patterns subject to the registration were 6 published as a collection, are true. But that presumption is rebuttable. For that reason, Le Château 7 propounded both document requests and interrogatories directed to discovering evidence that 8 might rebut the presumption. As reflected in Exhibit I to the Declaration of David W. Quinto in 9 support of Le Château's Motion for Summary Judgment dated April 22, 2011, Le Château sought 10 documents "sufficient to show the dates of sale and the identity of the purchaser" of any fabric 11 printed with each of the 12 designs subject to the copyright registration certificate in issue, as well 12 as all documents "evidencing, reflecting or referring to the date on which [plaintiff] first offered 13 for sale" each design subject to the copyright registration certificate in issue. Except as to the one 14 design as to which plaintiff claims infringement, plaintiff's responses were identical:

15 Objection: Vague, calls for legal conclusion, not narrowly tailored 16 to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence, intrusive of the 17 privacy rights of third parties.

18 Significantly, though, in response to Request No. 19, which sought information concerning 19 the publication of the specific pattern that plaintiff alleges was infringed, plaintiff as much as 20 conceded that the registered works were never published as a collection:

21 [O]nce plaintiff's design team has completed the designs, the 22 collection is released to the company's sales representatives, which 23 exhibit Plaintiff's designs to Plaintiff's customers in the apparel 24 industry by showing said customers samples and images of 25 Plaintiff's designs. The sales team will also provide [sic] swatches, 26 headers, and other samples to potential customers for the customers' 27 further review. . . . While records are kept as to when orders are 28 placed, there is no record of each and every time a design or 29 collection is shown, or when the designs or collections are first 30 offered to customers.

31 In other words, the sales representatives show all available designs to plaintiff's customers without 32 regard to whether the individual designs were registered pursuant to this certificate of copyright 33 registration or that certificate of copyright registration. They are not offered as separate

1 collections. Further, the patterns were released to the sales representatives "once [the] design team 2 ha[d] completed the designs" - as opposed to "when the collection had been published."

3 Plaintiff's responses to Le Château's interrogatories were also evasive. As reflected in 4 Exhibit J to the Quinto Declaration, Le Château propounded separate interrogatories asking as to 5 each pattern included within the collective registration: "With respect to the first such sale 6 reflected in YOUR records, state the date of sale and identity of the purchaser" of the fabric 7 printed with that design. In all cases, plaintiff's response was the same:

8 Objection: Vague, calls for a legal conclusion, not narrowly tailored 9 to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence, intrusive of the privacy rights of third parties.

10 Because plaintiff, alone, would and should have evidence concerning whether the 12 11 patterns subject to the copyright registration were in fact published as a collection but plaintiff has 12 instead failed to keep, refused to produce, or spoliated all such evidence, plaintiff has made it 13 impossible for Le Château to disprove that the federal courts have subject matter jurisdiction to 14 hear this case.

16 III. PLAINTIFF TACITLY CONCEDES THAT THE "ADVERSE INFERENCE" 17 RULE SHOULD APPLY HERE.

18 Because plaintiff has withheld or failed to keep all evidence necessary to challenge the 19 presumption that the 12 patterns that are the subject of its copyright registration were published as 20 a collection, Le Château's moving papers argued at 8:3-22 that it is entitled to an adverse inference 21 presumption. In support of its argument, Le Château cited two Ninth Circuit cases, one case from 22 the Eighth Circuit, and the Federal Jury Practice Instructions. Plaintiff's opposition nowhere 23 mentions any of those authorities, nor does plaintiff offer any explanation or argument why the 24 adverse inference rule should not apply here. The obvious conclusion is that it does, and that the 25 Court is entitled to infer that the evidence concerning whether the 12 patterns were published as a 26 collection would be unfavorable to plaintiff. Because the Court may infer that such evidence 27 would be unfavorable, plaintiff is not entitled to rely on the rebuttable presumption that the 28 patterns at issue were published as a collection. That is also consistent with common sense. A 1 sales representative would not attempt to sell separate collections of 12 patterns each but would 2 attempt to sell all available patterns without regard to how they were registered.

4 IV. PLAINTIFF HAS ALSO FAILED TO REBUT LE CHÂTEAU'S SHOWING THAT 5 ANY INFRINGEMENT OF ITS COLLECTION WAS DE MINIMIS.

6 Is an anthology infringed if someone reproduces a single work included therein without 7 permission? Obviously not. If the copied story is independently subject to copyright protection, 8 the owner of the copyright therein might have a claim for infringement but the holder of the 9 copyright in the anthology has no claim that the collective work was infringed.

10 So too, here. There are 12 patterns subject to the copyright registration. None is alleged to 11 be more important or more valuable than any other. There is no argument that any one pattern is 12 akin to the signature musical phrase in a piece of music that, when played, immediately calls to 13 mind the entire musical composition. Nor is there any contention that any one pattern is akin to a 14 dramatic or highly memorable scene in a motion picture that will be immediately recognized by 15 the public long after the movie was last exhibited. Instead, the pattern at issue is merely 8.5
 16 percent of a collection of otherwise equal works. Accordingly, there is no "substantial" similarity 17 between the one pattern at issue and the 12 patterns subject to the copyright registration certificate.

19 V. BECAUSE LE CHÂTEAU'S MOTION DOES NOT CONCERN A "PROCEDURAL 20 ISSUE," LE CHÂTEAU SHOULD BE AWARDED ITS COSTS AND FEES

21 Plaintiff mischaracterizes Le Château's motion as, "at best, asking for an adjudication on a 22 procedural issue." Opp. Mem. at 19:6-7. On that basis, it avers without further analysis that any 23 award of fees is barred by Buckhannon Board & Care Home, Inc. v. West Virginia Department of 24 Health and Human Resources, 532 U.S. 598, 121 S. Ct. 1835, 149 L. Ed. 2d 855 (2001).

25 Not so. Establishing that all courts lack subject matter jurisdiction to hear plaintiff's claim 26 is not a mere "procedural" issue. Rather, if Le Château's motion is granted, the Court will have

27

1 ruled as a matter of law that plaintiff cannot prevail on its copyright infringement claim in any 2 court.³

3 Buckhannon addressed whether the phrase "prevailing party," as used in the Fair Housing 4 Amendments Act of 1988 and the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, "includes a party that 5 has failed to secure a judgment on the merits or a court-ordered consent decree, but has 6 nonetheless achieved the desired result because the lawsuit brought about a voluntary change in 7 the defendant's conduct." 532 U.S. at 600. In Buckhannon, assisted living care facilities failed a 8 state inspection. After receiving cease-and-desist orders requiring the closure of its residential 9 care facilities, the owner sought declaratory relief that West Virginia had exceeded the 10 requirements of the applicable federal statutes in conducting the inspection. West Virginia agreed 11 to stay enforcement of the cease-and-desist orders pending the outcome of the declaratory 12 judgment action. While that action was pending, the West Virginia Legislature eliminated the test 13 requirements that had caused the plaintiff to fail the inspection. The civil litigation was then 14 dismissed as moot and the plaintiff sought attorney's fees as the "prevailing party." Id. at 601.

15 In concluding that achieving dismissal following an amendment to the applicable law did 16 not make the Buckhannon Board & Care Home the "prevailing party," the Court noted that prior 17 decisions had properly held that a party can be a "prevailing party" when it "has prevailed on the 18 merits of at least some of his claims." Id. at 603. It further noted that a "material alteration of the 19 legal relationship of the parties" had been held sufficient to permit an award of attorney's fees. Id.
 20

21 ³ Plaintiff could conceivably register a claim of copyright in the pattern in suit as a free-22 standing work and attempt to bring a new infringement action. However, even if it does so, Le 23 Château will have won permanent relief. Section 412 of the Copyright Act provides that if 24 registration is not effected within "the earlier of 3 months after first publication of the work or 1 25 month after the copyright owner has learned of the infringement," the plaintiff cannot recover 26 either statutory damages or attorney's fees. Accordingly, in any future action plaintiff's total 27 potential recovery would be limited to the actual profits earned from the sale of a few dozen 28 garments and less than one dozen tote bags. Further still, as reflected in the exhibits to Mr. Nah's declaration, Le Château sold the challenged items in 2007. Accordingly, any claim based thereon would now be time barred. 17 U.S.C. § 507(b) ("No civil action shall be maintained under the provisions of this title unless it is commenced within three years after the claim accrued.") Thus,
 Le Château will gain substantial, permanent relief if its motion is granted.

1 at 604. On the other hand, the Court rejected the notion that the term "prevailing party" authorizes 2 the award of attorney's fees "to a plaintiff who, by simply filing a nonfrivolous but nonetheless 3 potentially meritless lawsuit . . . has reached the 'sought-after destination' without obtaining any 4 judicial relief." Id. at 606.

5 Here, in contrast, plaintiff cannot contend that it brought a "nonfrivolous" lawsuit when it 6 had no facts whatever to support the assertion of federal jurisdiction. Nor can it argue that Le 7 Château gained mere "procedural" relief if its summary judgment motion is granted. It will have 8 eliminated any exposure to statutory damages and attorneys' fees. If Le Château prevails, its 9 success will not have been achieved in the legislature but in the courthouse. It will, therefore, be 10 the "prevailing party."

11 And Le Château would in any event be entitled to an award of attorney's fees under its 12 pending motion to dismiss brought pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 11.

13 Conclusion

14 For the reasons set forth above and in Le Château's moving papers, summary judgment 15 should be entered against plaintiff herein and Le Château should be awarded its costs and fees in 16 an amount to be determined by the Court.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECLARATION OF DAVID W. QUINTO

1. I am a member of the Bar of the State of California and of this Court. I am also a partner of Quinn Emanuel Urquhart & Sullivan, LLP, attorneys for Defendant Le Château, Inc., herein. I make this declaration of my personal and firsthand knowledge and, if called and sworn as a witness, I could and would testify competently thereto.

7 2. In the past, I have represented other entities sued by the plaintiff herein, L.A.
8 Printex Industries, Inc., for alleged copyright infringement. In one such action (that ultimately 9 terminated in a "nuisance" settlement), my client provided three textile patterns L.A. Printex 10 Industries had sued upon were published in Korea before L.A. Printex Industries filed to register 11 them in the United States as its "original," unpublished works of art. In that same action, my 12 client showed me two other patterns that had appeared in fashion magazines published in the 13 United States years before L.A. Printex Industries had applied to the United States Copyright 14 Office to register them as its "original" works of art. In another action that also terminated in a 15 settlement, my client provided me with evidence that the pattern in suit was published in Korea 16 before L.A. Printex Industries registered it as its "original" work of art. Further, my client 17 provided me with evidence that it had already completed the steps necessary to print the design 18 before the date that L.A. Printex Industries claimed to have published the pattern.

19 I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States of America 20 that the foregoing is true and correct.

Executed this fifth day of May, 2011, at Los Angeles, California.
